REGIONAL WEATHER SUMMARY

Occasional periods of light snow / fog remain over the area this morning as Low pressure pulls off to the east, allowing a weak ridge of High pressure to build in from the northwest this afternoon. Expect decreasing cloudiness through the early evening hours, with cloudy skies late night into tomorrow as the next system approaches from the west, with occasional light snow expected early morning, and a stronger dose around midday as the Low crashes into Alexander Island to the south-southwest. Another much stronger wave follows behind that early on Friday morning.
